

METROPOLITAN

Winter Dreams

by
F. Scott
Fitzgerald

Illustrations
by Arthur
William
Brown

*"I don't know
what's the matter with me. Last night
I thought I was in love
with a man and to-night
I think I'm in love with you—"*

SOME of the caddies were poor as sin and lived in one-room houses with a neurasthenic cow in the front yard, but Dexter Green's father owned the second best grocery store in Dillard—the best one was "The Hub," patronized by the wealthy people from Lake Erminie—and Dexter caddied only for pocket-money.

In the fall when the days became crisp and grey and the long Minnesota winter shut down like the white lid of a box, Dexter's skis moved over the snow that hid the fairways of the golf course. At these times the country gave him a feeling of profound melancholy—it offended him that the links should lie in enforced gallowiness, haunted by ragged sparrows for the long season. It was dreary, too, that on the tees where the gay colors fluttered in summer there were now only the desolate sand-boxes knee-deep in crusted ice. When he crossed the hills the wind blew cold as misery, and if the sun was out he tramped with his eyes squinted up against the hard dimensionless glare.

In April the winter ceased abruptly. The snow ran down into Lake Erminie scarcely tarrying for the early golfers to brave the season with red and black balls. Without elation, without an interval of moist glory the cold was gone.

Dexter knew that there was something dismal about this northern spring, just as he knew there was something gorgeous about the fall. Fall made him clench his hands and tremble and repeat idiotic sentences to himself and make brisk abrupt gestures of command to imaginary audiences and armies. October filled him with hope which November raised to a sort of ecstatic triumph, and in this wood the fleeting brilliant impressions of the summer at Lake Erminie were ready grist to his will. He became a golf champion and defeated Mr. T. A. Hedrick in a marvelous match played over a hundred times in the fairways of his imagination, a match each detail of which he changed about untiringly—sometimes winning with almost laughable ease, sometimes coming up magnificently from behind. Again, stepping from a Pierce-Arrow automobile, like Mr. Mortimer Jones, he strolled frigidly into the lounge of the Erminie Golf Club—or perhaps, surrounded by an admiring crowd, he gave an exhibition of fancy diving from the springboard of the Erminie Club raft. . . . Among those most impressed was Mr. Mortimer Jones.

AND one day it came to pass that Mr. Jones, himself and not his ghost, came up to Dexter, almost with tears in his eyes and said that Dexter was the — — best caddy in the club and wouldn't he decide not to quit if Mr. Jones made it worth his while, because every other — — caddy in the club lost one ball a hole for him—regularly—

"No, sir," said Dexter, decisively, "I don't want to caddy any more." Then, after a pause, "I'm too old."

"You're—why, you're not more than fourteen. Why did you decide just this morning that you wanted to quit? You promised that next week you'd go over to the state tournament with me."

"I decided I was too old."

Dexter handed in his "A Class" badge, collected what money was due him from the caddy master and caught the train for Dillard.

"The best — — caddy I ever saw," shouted Mr. Mortimer Jones over a drink that afternoon, "Never lost a ball! Willing! Intelligent! Quiet! Honest! Grateful!"

The little girl who had done this was eleven—beautifully ugly as little girls are apt to be who are destined after a few years to be inexpressably lovely and bring no end of misery to a great number of men. The spark, however, was perceptible. There was a general ungodliness in the way her lips twisted down at the corners when she smiled and in the —Heaven help us!—in the almost passionate quality of her eyes. Vitality is born early in such women. It was utterly in evidence now, shining through her thin frame in a sort of glow.

She had come eagerly out on to the course at nine o'clock with a white linen nurse and five small new golf clubs in a white canvas bag which the nurse was carrying. When Dexter first saw her she was standing by the caddy house, rather ill-at-ease and trying to conceal the fact by engaging her nurse in an obviously unnatural conversation illumined by startling and irrelevant smiles from herself.

"Well, it's certainly a nice day, Hilda," Dexter heard her say, then she drew down the corners of her mouth, smiled and glanced furtively around, her eyes in transit falling for an instant on Dexter.

Then to the nurse:

"Well, I guess there aren't very many people out here this morning, are there?"

The smile again radiant, blatantly artificial—convincing.

"I don't know what we're supposed to do now," said the nurse, looking nowhere in particular.

"Oh, that's all right"—the smile—"I'll fix it up."

Dexter stood perfectly still, his mouth faintly ajar. He knew that if he moved forward a step his stare would be in her line of vision—if he moved backward he would lose his full view of her face—For a moment he had not realized how young she was. Now he remembered having seen her several times the year before—in bloomers.

Suddenly, involuntarily, he laughed, a short abrupt laugh—then, startled by himself, he turned and began to walk quickly away.

"Boy!"

Dexter stopped.

"Boy—"

Beyond question he was addressed. Not only that, but he was treated to that absurd smile, that preposterous smile—the memory of which at least half a dozen men were to carry to the grave.

"Boy, do you know where the golf teacher is?"

"He's giving a lesson."

"Well, do you know where the caddy-master is?"

"He's not here yet this morning."

"Oh." For a moment this baffled her. She stood alternately on her right and left foot.

"We'd like to get a caddy," said the nurse, "Mrs. Mortimer Jones sent us out to play golf and we don't know how without we get a caddy."

Here she was stopped by an ominous glance from Miss Jones, followed immediately by the smile.

"There aren't any caddies here except me," said Dexter to the nurse, "And I got to stay here in charge until the caddy-master gets here."

"Oh."

Miss Jones and her retinue now withdrew and at a proper distance from Dexter became involved in a heated conversation. The conversation was concluded by Miss Jones taking one of the clubs and hitting it on the ground with violence. For further emphasis she raised it again and was about to bring it down smartly upon the nurse's bosom, when the nurse seized the club and twisted it from her hands.

"You darn fool!" cried Miss Jones wildly.

Another argument ensued. Realizing that the elements of the comedy were implied in the scene, Dexter several times began to smile but each time slew the smile before it reached maturity. He could not resist the monstrous conviction that the little girl was justified in beating the nurse.

The situation was resolved by the fortuitous appearance of the caddy-master who was appealed to immediately by the nurse.

"Miss Jones is to have a little caddy and this one says he can't go."

"Mr. McKenna said I was to wait here till you came," said Dexter quickly.

"Well, he's here now." Miss Jones smiled cheerfully at the caddy-master. Then she dropped her bag and set off at a haughty mince toward the first tee.

"Well?" The caddy-master turned to Dexter, "What you standing there like a dummy for? Go pick up the young lady's clubs."

"I don't think I'll go out today," said Dexter.

"You dont—"

"I think I'll quit."

The enormity of his decision frightened him. He was a favorite caddy and the thirty dollars a month he earned through the summer were not to be made elsewhere in Dillard. But he had received a strong emotional shock and his perturbation required a violent and immediate outlet.

It is not so simple as that, either. As so frequently would be the case in the future, Dexter was unconsciously dictated to by his winter dreams.

NOW, of course, the quality and the seasonability of these winter dreams varied, but the stuff of them remained. They persuaded Dexter several years later to pass up a business course at the State University—his father, prospering now, would have paid his way—for the precarious advantage of attending an older and more famous university in the East, where he was bothered by his scanty funds. But do not get the impression, because his winter dreams happened to be concerned at first with musings on the rich, that there was anything shoddy in the boy. He wanted not association with glittering things and glittering people—he wanted the glittering things themselves. Often he reached out for the best without knowing why he wanted it—and sometimes he ran up against the mysterious denials and prohibitions in which life indulges. It is with one of those denials and not with his career as a whole that this story deals.

He made money. It was rather amazing. After college he went to the city from which Lake Erminie draws its wealthy patrons. When he was only twenty-three and had been there not quite two years, there were already people who liked to say, "Now there's a boy—" All about him rich men's sons were peddling bonds precariously, or investing patrimonies precariously, or plodding through the two dozen volumes of canned rubbish in the "George Washington Commercial Course," but Dexter borrowed a thousand dollars on his college degree and his steady eyes, and bought a partnership in a laundry.

"The name is Judy Jones. Ghastly reputation but enormously popular." She favored him with an absurd smirk—rather, what tried to be a smirk, for, twist her mouth as she might, it was not grotesque, it was merely beautiful

It was a small laundry when he went into it. Dexter made a specialty of learning how the English washed fine woolen golf stockings without shrinking them. Inside of a year he was catering to the trade who wore knickerbockers. Men were insisting that their shetland hose and sweaters go to his laundry just as they had insisted on a caddy who could find golf balls. A little later he was doing their wives' lingerie as well—and running five branches in different parts of the city. Before he was twenty-seven he owned the largest string of laundries in his section of the country. It was then that he sold out and went to New York. But the part of his story that concerns us here goes back to when he was making his first big success.

When he was twenty-three Mr. W. L. Hart, one of the grey-haired men who like to say "Now there's a boy"—gave him a guest card to the Lake Erminie Club for over a week-end. So he signed his name one day on the register, and that afternoon played golf in a foursome with Mr. Hart and Mr. Sandwood and Mr. T. A. Hedrick. He did not consider it necessary to remark that he had once carried Mr. Hart's bag over this same links and that he knew every trap and gully with his eyes shut—but he found himself glancing at the four caddies who trailed them, trying to catch a gleam or gesture that would remind him of himself, that would lessen the gap which lay between his past and his future.

It was a curious day, slashed abruptly with fleeting, familiar impressions. One minute he had the sense of being a trespasser—in the next he was impressed by the tremendous superiority he felt toward Mr. T. A. Hedrick, who was a bore and not even a good golfer any more.

Then, because of a ball Mr. Hart lost near the fifteenth green an enormous thing happened. While they were searching the stiff grasses of the rough there was a clear call of "Fore!" from behind a hill in their rear. And as they all turned abruptly from their search a bright new ball sliced abruptly over the hill and caught Mr. T. A. Hedrick rather neatly in the stomach.

Mr. T. A. Hedrick grunted and cursed.

"By Gad!" cried Mr. Hedrick, "they ought to put some of these crazy women off the course. It's getting to be outrageous."

A head and a voice came up together over the hill:

"Do you mind if we go through?"

"You hit me in the stomach!" thundered Mr. Hedrick.

"Did I?" The girl approached the group of men. "I'm sorry. I yelled 'Fore!'"

Her glance fell casually on each of the men. She nodded to Sandwood and then scanned the fairway for her ball.

"Did I bounce off into the rough?"

It was impossible to determine whether this question was ingenuous or malicious. In a moment, however, she left no doubt, for as her partner came up over the hill she called cheerfully.

"Here I am! I'd have gone on the green except that I hit something."

As she took her stance for a short mashie shot, Dexter looked at her closely. She wore a blue gingham dress, rimmed at throat and shoulders with a white edging that accentuated her tan. The quality of exaggeration, of thinness that had made her passionate eyes and down turning mouth absurd at eleven was gone now. She was arrestingly beautiful. The color in her cheeks was centered like the color in a picture—it was not a "high" color, but a sort of fluctuating and feverish warmth, so shaded that it seemed at any moment it would recede and disappear. This color and the mobility of her mouth gave a continual impression of flux, of intense life, of passionate vitality—balanced only partially by the sad luxury of her eyes.

She swung her mashie impatiently and without interest, pitching the ball into a sandpit on the other side of the green. With a quick insincere smile and a careless "Thank you!" she went on after it.

"That Judy Jones!" remarked Mr. Hedrick on the next tee, as they waited—some moments—for her to play on ahead. "All she needs is to be turned up and spanked for six months and then to be married off to an old-fashioned cavalry captain."

"Gosh, she's good looking!" said Mr. Sandwood, who was just over thirty.

"Good-looking!" cried Mr. Hedrick contemptuously, "she always looks as if she wanted to be kissed! Turning those big cow-eyes on every young calf in town!"

It is doubtful if Mr. Hedrick intended a reference to the maternal instinct.

"She'd play pretty good golf if she'd try," said Mr. Sandwood.

"She has no form," said Mr. Hedrick solemnly.

"She has a nice figure," said Mr. Sandwood.

"Better thank the Lord she doesn't drive a swifter ball," said Mr. Hart, winking at Dexter. "Come on. Let's go."

Later in the afternoon the sun went down with a riotous swirl of gold and varying blues and scarlets, and left the dry rustling night of western summer. Dexter

"Hello, kiddo." The familiar voice at his elbow crossed the room to him—Judy Jones, a watched from the verandah of the Erminie Club, watched the even overlap of the waters in the little wind, silver molasses under the harvest moon. Then the moon held a finger to her lips and the lake became a clear pool, pale and quiet. Dexter put on his bathing suit and swam out to the farthest raft, where he stretched dripping on the wet canvas of the spring board.

There was a fish jumping and a star shining and the lights around the lake were gleaming. Over on a dark peninsula a piano was playing the songs of last summer and of summers before that—songs from "The Pink Lady" and "The Chocolate Soldier" and "Mlle. Modiste"—and because the sound of a piano over a stretch of water had always seemed beautiful to Dexter he lay perfectly quiet and listened.

ARTHUR WILLIAM BROWN — startled him. Judy Jones had left a man and slender enamelled doll in cloth of gold

The tune the piano was playing at that moment had been gay and new five years before when Dexter was a sophomore at college. They had played it at a prom once and because he could not afford the luxury of proms in those days he had stood outside the gymnasium and listened. The sound of the tune and the splash of the fish jumping precipitated in him a sort of ecstasy and it was with that ecstasy he viewed what happened to him now. The ecstasy was a gorgeous appreciation. It was his sense that, for once, he was magnifi-cantly atune to life and that everything about him was radiating a brightness and a glamor he might never know again.

A low pale oblong detached itself suddenly from the darkness of the peninsula, spitting forth the reverberate sound of a racing motorboat. Two white streamers of cleft water rolled themselves out behind it and almost immediately the boat was beside him, drowning out the hot tinkle of the piano in the drone of its spray. Dexter raising himself on his arms was aware of a figure standing at the wheel, of two dark eyes regarding him over the lengthening space of water—then the boat had gone by and was sweeping in an immense and purposeless circle of spray round and round in the middle of the lake. With equal eccentricity one of the circles flattened out and headed back toward the raft.

"Who's that?" she called, shutting off her motor. She was so near now that Dexter could see her bathing suit, which consisted apparently of pink rompers. "Oh—you're one of the men I hit in the stomach."

The nose of the boat bumped the raft. After an inexpert struggle, Dexter managed to twist the line around a two-by-four. Then the raft tilted rakishly as she sprang on.

"Well, kiddo," she said huskily, "do you"—she broke off. She had sat herself upon the springboard, found it damp and jumped up quickly,—"do you want to go surf-board riding?"

He indicated that he would be delighted.

"The name is Judy Jones. Ghastly reputation but enormously popular." She favored him with an absurd smirk—rather, what tried to be a smirk, for, twist her mouth as she might, it was not grotesque, it was merely beautiful. "See that house over on the peninsula?"

"No."

"Well, there's a house there that I live in only you can't see it because it's too dark. And in that house there is a fella waiting for me. When he drove up by the door I drove out by the dock because he has watery eyes and asks me if I have an ideal."

There was a fish jumping and a star shining and the lights around the lake were gleaming. Dexter sat beside Judy Jones and she explained how her boat was driven. Then she was in the water, swimming to the floating surf-board with exquisite crawl. Watching her was as without effort to the eye as watching a branch waving or a sea-gull flying. Her arms, burned to butternut, moved sinuously among the dull platinum ripples, elbow appearing first, casting the forearm back with a cadence of falling water, then reaching out and down stabbing a path ahead.

They moved out into the lake and, turning, Dexter saw that she was kneeling on the low rear of the now up-tilted surf-board.

"Go faster," she called, "fast as it'll go."

Obediently he jammed the lever forward and the white spray mounted at the bow. When he looked around again the girl was standing up on the rushing board, her arms spread ecstatically, her eyes lifted toward the moon.

"It's awful cold, kiddo," she shouted, "What's your name anyways?"

"The name is Dexter Green. Would it amuse you to know how good you look back there?"

"Yes," she shouted, "It would amuse me. Except that I'm too cold. Come to dinner tomorrow night." (Continued on page 98)

A "Jack of All Trades" is usually Master of None

DEFINITION

The practice of Chiropractic consists of the adjustment, with the hands, of the movable segments of the spinal column to normal position for the purpose of releasing the prisoned impulse.

Ask Your Chiropractor for
"The Last Word"

A chiropractor is not a "Jack-of-all-trades." He is master of one.

All that the properly trained chiropractor pretends to know is how to adjust the spine.

He doesn't know much, but what he does know is true. What he does know works so well that Chiropractic has been built upon the failures of those who know so much that isn't true.

It takes three years of constant application in a first-class resident school to train a chiropractor to properly adjust the spine, providing he has the ability to learn. All the schools in the world, however, cannot train a person who lacks in faculty or desire to learn. Such incompetents invariably attempt to hide their lack of ability behind a mass of adjuncts, such as electrical devices, dietetics, baths, etc.

The competent Chiropractor uses nothing but his hands, and does nothing but adjust the misaligned vertebræ.

If you are thinking of trying Chiropractic, select a competent Chiropractor.

Employ none but a competent chiropractor.

Write for information regarding Chiropractors or Schools to the Universal Chiropractors' Association, Davenport, Iowa, U. S. A.

All Rights Reserved

Be a Chiropractor

Study Chiropractic at the Fountain Head —The Palmer School in Davenport

Chiropractic is the adjustment, with the hands, of the movable segments of the spinal column to normal position for the purpose of releasing the prisoned impulse. By it thousands have regained health and happiness.

The field for Chiropractors is unlimited. People will pay almost anything to be relieved of disease. Palmer graduates have met with remarkable success because they are trained properly under competent instructors.

B. J. PALMER
President

Write for prospectus—learn Chiropractic.

The Palmer SCHOOL OF CHIROPRACTIC
(CHIROPRACTIC FOUNTAIN HEAD)

9th and Brady Streets

DAVENPORT, IOWA

We Have No Branch Nor Affiliated Schools

hat in hand, handsome, unruffled, a proper gallant, made them a bow most courteously as he stepped backwards towards the door.

Domenico stayed him. "Ah, but wait. Let me know your name, young gentleman. Think how much I am your debtor."

A ghost of a smile flickered on Angioletto's lips.

"Since you tell me this was the Duke's son, I had rather say nothing, but take my leave."

Domenico flashed a proud glance at him, at the body, at Adelesa. "Sir," he replied. "This was the Duke's son, but I am what I am, and the Duke shall abide his son's mischance. At least, at some later time, visit me."

Adelesa suddenly intervened.

"Husband," she said pleadingly, "let me be strange—Sir," to Angioletto, who heard her gravely, yet still with that faint smile on his lips. "Sir, my heart is overflowing with gratitude, to you, and to heaven, but I will ask you never again to set foot in this house."

Domenico stared, but held his peace. Angioletto regarded both him and Adelesa for a second. Then, "You have my promise," he said.

She clasped her hands together in an ecstasy of thanks.

"Thank God."

Angioletto bowed, again went towards the door, stopped as he reached it, and again looked round the apartment. Adelesa was in her husband's arms. Alessandro on his back near the couch, seemed to be lying there, if not with an air of boredom, at least with an almost ostentatious disregard of all about him.

Angioletto shrugged his shoulders.

"Amen," he said. . . .

Winter Dreams

(Continued from page 15)

He kept thinking how glad he was that he had never caddied for this girl. The damp gingham clinging made her like a statue and turned her intense mobility to immobility at last.

"—At seven o'clock," she shouted, "Judy Jones, Girl, who hit man in stomach. Better write it down,"—and then, "Faster—oh, faster!"

HAD he been as calm inwardly as he was in appearance, Dexter would have had time to examine his surroundings in detail. He received, however, an enduring impression that the house was the most elaborate he had ever seen. He had known for a long time that it was the finest on Lake Erminie, with a Pompeian swimming pool and twelve acres of lawn and garden. But what gave it an air of breathless intensity was the sense that it was inhabited by Judy Jones—that it was as casual a thing to her as the little house in the village had once been to Dexter. There was a feeling of mystery in it, of bedrooms upstairs more beautiful and strange than other bedrooms, of gay and radiant activities taking place through these deep corridors and of romances that were not musty and laid already in lavender, but were fresh and breathing and set forth in rich motor cars and in great dances whose flowers were scarcely withered. They were more real because he could feel them all about him, pervading the air with the shades and echoes of still vibrant emotion.

And so while he waited for her to

Genuine BAYER ASPIRIN

SAY "BAYER" when you buy. Insist!

Unless you see the "Bayer Cross" on tablets, you are not getting the genuine Bayer product prescribed by physicians over 23 years and proved safe by millions for

Colds	Headache
Toothache	Rheumatism
Neuritis	Lumbago
Neuralgia	Pain, Pain

Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proper directions.

Handy "Bayer" boxes of 12 tablets—Also bottles of 24 and 100—Druggists.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Every Married Couple

and all who contemplate marriage

SHOULD OWN

This Complete Informative Book

"The Science of a New Life"

By JOHN COWAN, M. D.
408 Pages—Illustrated

Endorsed and recommended by foremost medical and religious critics throughout the U.S.A. Unfolds the secrets of married happiness, so often revealed too late! We can give only a few of the chapter subjects here as this book is not meant for children.

Marriage and its Advantages. Age at Which to Marry. Law of Choice. Love Analyzed. Qualities One Should Avoid in Choosing. Anatomy of Reproduction. Amative-ness: Continence. Children. Genius. Conception. Pregnancy. Confinement. TWILIGHT SLEEP. Nursing. How a Happy Married Life is secured.

Descriptive circular with table of contents mailed FREE.

J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Co., 117 Rose Street
New York City

THE SCIENCE OF A
NEW LIFE

SPECIAL OFFER

The regular price is $3.00. In order to introduce this work into as many neighborhoods as possible we will send one copy of our special $2.00 Edition to any reader of this Magazine, postpaid upon receipt of $2.00.

CHOICE $149 WEDDING RINGS
14 K GOLD-S

SEND NO MONEY—Just choose the ring you want, A, B or C. Send your name, address and finger size. Your ring will come by return mail.

(A)—Oval, artistically engraved with Orange Blossoms. (C)—Heavy Plain Narrow Yellow Gold English Oval Ring. (B)—Handsome, Square, Engraved Bridal Wreath design. Newest and most fashionable Rings. If you order rings A or B you can have your choice of Yellow Gold or the latest White Platinum finish. Unconditional 10-Year Guarantee. Pay postman $1.49 on arrival. Money back if not satisfied. Act Quick! Only limited number at this special price.

ROE & ELDER
332 Plymouth Court Dept. 176 Chicago

Varicose Veins

Seamless

Safely relieved by wearing Worcester Elastic Seamless Stockings; no seams to chafe and irritate limb. Fit better, wear longer, lowest prices, wonderful quality. Valuable Physician's Book FREE to customers.

Write today for illustrated literature.
WORCESTER ELASTIC STOCKING & TRUSS CO., Dept. 1-1 Worcester, Massachusetts.

Are You a Girl of To-day?

If you are, and have spare time, the METROPOLITAN will buy it. I have a dignified and successful plan which will interest every ambitious girl to invest her spare time profitably and pleasantly.

The Publishers of the METROPOLITAN have authorized me to select a young lady from each town and to give her the benefits of the plan I have worked so successfully.

It may be that you need money for a new gown, an art course, or the new fur coat—whatever your need, that crinkly new bills can supply, the opportunity of fulfillment is now yours.

Write me today. Tell me how many spare hours you have during the day or evening. You will hear from me by return mail.

Ruth Jordan
432 Fourth Ave. Metropolitan New York

appear he peopled the soft deep summer room and the sun porch that opened from it with the men who had already loved Judy Jones. He knew the sort of men they were—the men who when he first went to college had entered from the great prep-schools with graceful clothes and the deep tan of healthy summer, who did nothing or anything with the same debonaire ease.

Dexter had seen that, in one sense, he was better than these men. He was newer and stronger. Yet in acknowledging to himself that he wished his children to be like them he was admitting that he was but the rough, strong stuff from which this graceful aristocracy eternally sprang.

When, a year before, the time had come when he could wear good clothes, he had known who were the best tailors in America, and the best tailor in America had made him the suit he wore this evening. He had acquired that particular reserve peculiar to his university, that set it off from other universities. He recognized the value to him of such a mannerism and he had adopted it; he knew that to be careless in dress and manner required more confidence than to be careful. But carelessness was for his children. His mother's name had been Krimslich. She was a Bohemian of the peasant class and she had talked broken English to the end of her days. Her son must keep to the set patterns.

HE waited for Judy Jones in her house, and he saw these other young men around him. It excited him that many men had loved her. It increased her value in his eyes.

At a little after seven Judy Jones came downstairs. She wore a blue silk afternoon dress. He was disappointed at first that she had not put on something more elaborate, and this feeling was accentuated when, after a brief greeting, she went to the door of a butler's pantry and pushing it open called: "You can have dinner, Martha." He had rather expected that a butler would announce dinner, that there would be a cocktail perhaps. It even offended him that she should know the maid's name.

Then he put these thoughts behind him as they sat down together on a chintz-covered lounge.

"Father and mother won't be here," she said.

"Ought I to be sorry?"

"They're really quite nice," she confessed, as if it had just occurred to her. "I think my father's the best looking man of his age I've ever seen. And mother looks about thirty."

He remembered the last time he had seen her father, and found he was glad the parents were not to be here tonight. They would wonder who he was. He had been born in Keeble, a Minnesota village fifty miles farther north and he always gave Keeble as his home instead of Dillard. Country towns were well enough to come from if they weren't inconveniently in sight and used as foot-stools by fashionable lakes.

Before dinner he found the conversation unsatisfactory. The beautiful Judy seemed faintly irritable—as much so as it was possible to be with a comparative stranger. They discussed Lake Erminie and its golf course, the surf-board riding of the night before and the cold she had caught, which made her voice more husky and charming than ever. They talked of his university which she had visited frequently during the past two years, and of the nearby city which supplied Lake Erminie with its patrons and whither Dexter would return next day to his prospering laundries.

During dinner she slipped into a moody depression which gave Dexter a feeling of guilt. Whatever petulance she uttered in her throaty voice worried him. Whatever she smiled at—at him, at a silver fork, at nothing—it disturbed him that her smile could have no root in mirth, or even in amusement. When the red corners of her lips curved down, it was less a smile than an invitation to a kiss.

Then, after dinner, she led him out on the dark sun-porch and deliberately changed the atmosphere.

"Do I seem gloomy?" she demanded.

"No, but I'm afraid I'm boring you," he answered quickly.

"You're not. I like you. But I've just had rather an unpleasant afternoon. There was a—man I cared about. He told me out of a clear sky that he was poor as a church-mouse. He'd never even hinted it before. Does this sound horribly mundane?"

"Perhaps he was afraid to tell you."

"I suppose he was," she answered thoughtfully. "He didn't start right. You see, if I'd thought of him as poor—well, I've been mad about loads of poor men, and fully intended to marry them all. But in this case, I hadn't thought of him that way and my interest in him wasn't strong enough to survive the shock."

"I know. As if a girl calmly informed her fiancé that she was a widow. He might not object to widows, but—"

"Let's start right," she suggested suddenly. "Who are you, anyhow?"

For a moment Dexter hesitated. There were two versions of his life that he could tell. There was Dillard and his caddying and his struggle through college, or—

"I'm nobody," he announced. "My career is largely a matter of futures."

"Are you poor?"

"No," he said frankly, "I'm probably making more money than any man my age in the northwest. I know that's an obnoxious remark, but you advised me to start right."

There was a pause. She smiled, and with a touch of amusement.

"You sound like a man in a play."

"It's your fault. You tempted me into being assertive."

Suddenly she turned her dark eyes directly upon him and the corners of her mouth drooped until her face seemed to open like a flower. He dared scarcely to breathe, he had the sense that she was exerting some force upon him; making him overwhelmingly conscious of the youth and mystery that wealth imprisons and preserves, the freshness of many clothes, of cool rooms and gleaming things, safe and proud above the hot struggles of the poor.

The porch was bright with the bought luxury of starshine. The wicker of the settee squeaked fashionably when he put his arm around her, commanded by her eyes. He kissed her curious and lovely mouth and committed himself to the following of a trail.

IT began like that—and continued, with varying shades of intensity, on such a note right up to the dénouement. Dexter surrendered a part of himself to the most direct and unprincipled personality with which he had ever come in contact. Whatever the beautiful Judy Jones desired, she went after with the full pressure of her charm. There was no divergence of method, no jockeying for position or premeditation of effects—there was very little mental quality in any of her affairs. She simply made men conscious to the highest degree of her physical loveliness.

Dexter had no desire to change her. Her deficiencies were knit up with a passionate energy that transcended and justified them.

When, as Judy's head lay against his shoulder that first night, she whispered:

"I don't know what's the matter with me. Last night I thought I was in love with a man and tonight I think I'm in love with you—"

—it seemed to him a beautiful and romantic thing to say. It was the exquisite excitability that for the moment he controlled and owned. But a week later he was compelled to view this same quality in a different light. She took him in her roadster to a picnic supper and after supper she disappeared, likewise in her roadster, with another man. Dexter became enormously upset and was scarcely able to be decently civil to the other people present. When she assured him that she had not kissed the other man he knew she was lying—yet he was glad that she had taken the trouble to lie to him.

He was, as he found before the summer ended, one of a dozen, a varying dozen, who circulated about her. Each of them had at one time been favored above all others—about half of them still basked in the solace of occasional sentimental revivals. Whenever one showed signs of dropping out through long neglect she granted him a brief honeyed hour which encouraged him to tag along for a year or so longer. Judy made these forays upon the helpless and defeated without malice, indeed half unconscious that there was anything mischievous in what she did.

When a new man came to town everyone dropped out—dates were automatically cancelled.

The helpless part of trying to do anything about it was that she did it all herself. She was not a girl who could be "won" in the kinetic sense—she was proof against cleverness, she was proof against charm, if any of these assailed her too strongly she would immediately resolve the affair to a physical basis and under the magic of her physical splendor the strong as well as the brilliant played her game and not their own. She was entertained only by the gratification of her desires and by the direct exercise of her own charm. Perhaps from so much youthful love, so many youthful lovers she had come, in self defense, to nourish herself wholly from within.

Succeeding Dexter's first exhilaration came restlessness and dissatisfaction. The helpless ecstasy of losing himself in her charm was a powerful opiate rather than a tonic. It was fortunate for his work during the winter that those moments of ecstasy came infrequently. Early in their acquaintance it had seemed for a while that there was a deep and spontaneous mutual attraction—that first August for example—three days of long evenings on her dusky verandah, of strange wan kisses through the late afternoon, in shadowy alcoves or behind the protecting trellises of the garden arbors, of "Wonderful!!"

That's what is said after sick, aching, burning feet have been fitted to the

New

A. E. LITTLE SHOE

Arch Supporting Suspension
Conditioning

Very often the pain does not stop with the feet alone, but is also felt in the legs and back. The A. E. LITTLE SHOE is the result of 25 years' concentrated effort on one subject—the first important improvement in shoe making for 35 years. Ask those who wear them and hear them say "Wonderful" That's All.

Ask your doctor. Ask your shoe dealer. Send to the factory for further information.

A. E. LITTLE COMPANY

The Makers of SOROSIS
The Shoe with Millions of Friends

WOMEN'S FACTORY: LYNN, MASS.
MEN'S FACTORY: BROCKTON, MASS.
CHILDREN'S FACTORY:
NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

New York Store: 449 FIFTH AVENUE
Brooklyn Store: 450 FULTON ST.

Become an ARTIST!

BIG PRICES
PAID FOR DRAWINGS

Well-trained commercial artists earn $50, $75, $100, $150 a week, and sometimes even more. If you like to draw, develop your talent—learn the secrets that make your drawings worth real money. Well-trained artists are always at a premium.

LEARN AT HOME QUICKLY

The Federal "Master" Course contains exclusive lessons by leading illustrators and designers. Every step is clear and simple, no previous training needed. You receive individual personal criticism on your work. Write for "YOUR FUTURE," a 56-page book telling every detail, and how to turn your spare hours into money. To anyone 16 years old or more, it is free for the asking. Write today, kind'y stating your age.

Federal School of Commercial Designing 1056 Federal
Schools Bldg.
Minneapolis,
Minn.

High School Course in 2 Years

You can complete this simplified High School Course at home inside two years. Meets all requirements for entrance to college and the leading professions. This and thirty-six other practical courses are described in our Free Bulletin. Send for it TODAY.

AMERICAN SCHOOL
Dept. H-955 Drexel Ave. & 58th St. CHICAGO

Kill The Hair Root

My method is the only way to prevent the hair from growing again. Easy, painless, harmless. No scars. Booklet free. Write today, enclosing 3 stamps. We teach Beauty Culture.

D. J. MAHLER, 982-X Mahler Park, Providence, R. I.

mornings when she was fresh as a dream and almost shy at meeting him in the clarity of the rising day. There was all the ecstasy of an engagement about it, sharpened by his realization that there was no engagement. It was during those three days that, for the first time, he had asked her to marry him. She said "maybe some day," she said "kiss me," she said "I'd like to marry you," she said "I love you,"—she said—nothing.

The three days were interrupted by the arrival of a New York man who visited the Jones' for half September. To Dexter's agony, rumor engaged them. The man was the son of the president of a great trust company. But at the end of a month it was reported that Judy was yawning. At a dance one night she sat all evening in a motor boat with an old beau, while the New Yorker searched the club for her frantically. She told the old beau that she was bored with her visitor and two days later he left. She was seen with him at the station and it was reported that he looked very mournful indeed.

ON this note the summer ended. Dexter was twenty-four and he found himself increasingly in a position to do as he wished. He joined two clubs in the city and lived at one of them. Though he was by no means an integral part of the stag-lines at these clubs he managed to be on hand at dances where Judy Jones was likely to appear. He could have gone out socially as much as he liked—he was an eligible young man, now, and popular with downtown fathers. His confessed devotion to Judy Jones had rather solidified his position. But he had no social aspirations and rather despised the dancing men who were always on tap for the Thursday or Saturday parties and who filled in at dinners with the younger married set. Already he was playing with the idea of going East to New York. He wanted to take Judy Jones with him. No disillusion as to the world in which she had grown up could cure his illusion as to her desirability.

Remember that—for only in the light of it can what he did for her be understood.

Eighteen months after he first met Judy Jones he became engaged to another girl. Her name was Irene Scheerer and her father was one of the men who had always believed in Dexter. Irene was light haired and sweet and honorable and a little stout and she had two beaus whom she pleasantly relinquished when Dexter formally asked her to marry him.

Summer, fall, winter, spring, another summer, another fall—so much

(Continued on page 104)

Where To Find A Husband For The New Girl

(Continued from page 40)

flapper qualities, that she is frank or intelligent, foolish or dissolute, for within that broad designation, "society girl," you will find the girl who greets you with so masculine a line of slang that you cannot match it, the girl who is just as reactionary as her great-grand-mother, the girl who refuses to come out and is taking up a career in medicine and the girl who has broken away from her family and is living in Greenwich Village.

The society girl group, as an entity, is being slowly destroyed, and what is true of her is also true all along the line. The girl is changing, but some girls are changing more rapidly than others, so that the American young woman has become so variegated a creature that to discuss any one characteristic of any one group, or even to find a group, is impossible. One thing, however, is true from Vermont to San Francisco. Women are becoming more alive to themselves, as well as more interested in the affairs of the world at large. They are becoming articulate; they are talking about themselves; people are talking about them. They are taking life into their own hands and the problems arising from this fact are the same all over the country.

This is true, I am sure, in spite of the fact that one of the deans of a large women's college recently told me that while a certain group of girls among the undergraduates was dangerously independent, the large majority was as conservative as ever. I agree with her that they may be conservative, but that it is because they have decided themselves that they want to be conservative, and not because their mothers told them to be so.

Breakfasting one morning, not long ago, with a clergyman in a sleepy little town in Vermont, I listened to his account of his problems relating to the girls of the parish, and if you could have heard the conversation, I am sure you would have agreed with me that so far as the problems were concerned, his pastorate might have been located in a crowded section of New York City.

We may discuss now this new self-determination of women. For the most part, at present writing, she has kept the characteristics of both the old and the new régime. Said an attractive member of the Junior League, the other day, "You'll find us very independent in office hours, but after five o'clock, when we go home, we're just the same as we ever were in our attitude toward men, at tea in our mother's house or at a dance." Perhaps this is true when they have a home, but the girl who is completely on her own seeks the companionship of men in much the same way as she seeks the companionship of other women, and this new basis of camaraderie is, in the main, agreeable to both sexes. The girl arranges her parties, she invites the men she wants, sometimes she buys the theatre tickets, sometimes she pays for the taxi, and as time goes on she will doubtless do this more and more.

The question is, is it from this particular type of companion that the man selects his wife? Isn't there, perhaps, a subconscious resentment that he is no longer the pursuing cave-man? He seems self-conscious of the fact that the line of superiority, the only thing keeping him definitely masculine in the modern world, is slowly disappearing.

When a man pays for a girl's lunch, he is indulging in a custom which has put him at ease for centuries. It is an egotistical gesture. Mentally the lady bows and submits. They both feel it is as it should be. But when she pays for the lunch—here we have a clash of two egos, one being rapidly built up, the other refusing to be broken down. This struggle presents fascinating problems. Like any fight, it is interesting. However, like any fight, one doesn't like to have it around the house.

Considering this, look around you. What sort of wife is the young business man choosing? The intellectual, the writer or the artist, is perhaps taking the chance of a struggle with the independent woman. But the young business man, who wants his home to be an easeful place after the strenuities of the day, goes a long way to find a wife who at least approximates what a wife once was.

What then happens to the girls of his set who have changed their way of thinking and living? They must look around for husbands of a different type, or they must educate their men up to themselves. Perhaps they may even have gone so far as to insist on a single standard of morality and to indulge in thoughts and speculations on "trial marriage," but it will be a long time before the average man thinks of marriage in these terms.

If the independent woman is determined to preserve and develop this new ego of hers, her search for a husband is likely to be difficult and perilous, if not futile. However, she has proved herself to be so clever in business and in politics, and her wife has not been undeveloped through the ages, that doubtless she will speedily find a way to reduce the male ego to a proper state of servitude.

The New Girl and Her Future Husband

What Do YOU Think About Mr. Farrar's
Ideas on this Subject

PRIZE CONTEST ANNOUNCEMENT

For the best letter of not more than 500 words we offer these prizes: $20.00 first prize; $15.00 second prize; $10.00 third prize. Competition closes December 5th. The winning letters will appear in the February Metropolitan Address Editor The Girl of To-day, Metropolitan Magazine, 432 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Contest letters cannot be returned.

LUCKY STRIKE
"IT'S TOASTED"

Cigarette

It's toasted
This one extra process gives a delightful quality that cannot be duplicated

Guaranteed by
The American Tobacco Company
INCORPORATED

Winter Dreams

(Continued from page 102)

he had given of his active life to the curved lips of Judy Jones. She had treated him with interest, with encouragement, with malice, with indifference, with contempt. She had inflicted on him the innumerable little slights and indignities possible in such a case—as if in revenge for having ever cared for him at all. She had beckoned him and yawned at him and beckoned him again and he had responded often with bitterness and narrowed eyes. She had brought him ecstatic happiness and intolerable agony of spirit. She had caused him untold inconvenience and not a little trouble. She had insulted him and she had ridden over him and she had played his interest in her against his interest in his work—for fun. She had done everything to him except to criticise him—this she had not done—it seemed to him only because it might have sullied the utter indifference she manifested and sincerely felt toward him.

When autumn had come and gone again it occurred to him that he could not have Judy Jones. He had to beat this into his mind but he convinced himself at last. He lay awake at night for a while and argued it over. He told himself the trouble and the pain she had caused him, he enumerated her glaring deficiencies as a wife. Then he said to himself that he loved her and after a while he fell asleep. For a week, lest he imagine her husky voice over the telephone or her eyes opposite him at lunch, he worked hard and late and at night he went to his office and plotted out his years.

AT the end of a week he went to a dance and cut in on her once. For almost the first time since they had met he did not ask her to sit out with him or tell her that she was lovely. It hurt him that she did not miss these things—that was all. He was not jealous when he saw that there was a new man tonight. He had been hardened against jealousy long before.

He stayed late at the dance. He sat for an hour with Irene Scheerer and talked about books and about music. He knew very little about either. But he was beginning to be master of his own time now—and he had a rather priggish notion that he—the young and already fabulously successful Dexter Green—should know more about such things.

That was in October when he was twenty-five. In January Dexter and Irene became engaged. It was to be announced in June and they were to be married three months later.

The Minnesota winter prolonged itself interminably and it was almost May when the winds came soft and the snow ran down into Lake Erminie at last. For the first time in over a year Dexter was enjoying a certain tranquility of spirit. Judy Jones had been in Florida and afterwards in Hot Springs and somewhere she had been engaged and somewhere she had broken it off. At first, when Dexter had definitely given her up, it had made him sad that people still linked them together and asked for news of her, but when he began to be placed at dinner next to Irene Scheerer people didn't ask him about her any more—they told him about her. He ceased to be an authority on her.

Happy, restful
days—

CHALFONTE- HADDON HALL

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

Combined in ownership and management. Hospitable, quiet homelike. Broad deck porches overlooking the sea. Beautiful pavilions and sun parlors. Pleasant rooms. Golf and yacht club privileges.

On Beach and Boardwalk. American Plan. Write for folder and rates.

LEEDS and LIPPINCOTT COMPANY

The beautiful new Boardwalk Wing of Haddon Hall affords new opportunities for pleasure, comfort and rest

THE GREAT GAME

ROOK

The best-loved home game in America.

Enjoyed by every member of the family. For 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6 players. Exciting partnership games. Splendid for progressive parties. Price 75c. Ask Your Dealer or by mail from us. Rook Co., Salem, Mass.

AMAZING OFFER on UNDERWOODS

Only $3.00 down puts a Shipman-Ward Rebuilt Underwood in your home or office. Try it; test it in every way for ten days. If you can tell it from a brand new Underwood in looks, action or quality of work, return it and we'll refund every cent paid by you. If you decide to keep it, pay the balance in easy monthly payments and make a big saving in price. We guarantee the machine five years. Act now—send for free book and full particulars.

Shipman-Ward Mfg. Co.
Typewriter Emporium
1909 Shipman Building, Montrose and Ravenswood Avenues, Chicago

XMAS TREE OUTFIT $1.75

ENJOY A SAFE CHRISTMAS—Don't Burn Dangerous Candles—Outfit & decorated tungsten lights. Battery or house current. Complete 10 ft. extra wire and attachment plug. Free 1 extra bulb.

16 Light Set—2 Bulbs Free—$3.49
SEND NO MONEY. Pay postman $1.75 when delivered. Send for FREE XMAS GIFT CATALOG.
UNITED LIGHTING FIXTURE CO., INC.
280 Bowery Dept. 516 New York City

May at last. Dexter walked the streets at night when the darkness was damp as rain, wondering that so soon, with so little done, so much of ecstasy had gone from him. May, one year back had been marked by Judy's poignant, unforgivable, yet forgiven turbulence—it had been one of those rare times when he fancied she had grown to care for him. That old penny's worth of happiness he had spent for this bushel of content. He knew that Irene would be no more than a curtain spread behind him, a hand moving among gleaming tea cups, a voice calling to children . . . fire and loveliness were gone, magic of night and the hushed wonder of the hours and seasons . . . slender lips, down turning, dropping to his lips like poppy petals, bearing him up into a heaven of eyes . . . a haunting gesture, light of a warm lamp on her hair. The thing was deep in him. He was too strong, too alive for it to die lightly.

In the middle of May when the weather balanced for a few days on the thin bridge that led to deep summer he turned in one night at Irene's house. Their engagement was to be announced in a week now—no one would be surprised at it. And tonight they would sit together on the lounge at the College Club and look on for an hour at the dancers. It gave him a sense of solidity to go with her—She was so sturdily popular, so intensely a "good egg."

He mounted the steps of the brown stone house and stepped inside.

"Irene," he called.

Mrs. Scheerer came out of the living room to meet him.

"Dexter," she said, "Irene's gone upstairs with a splitting headache. She wanted to go with you but I made her go to bed."

"Nothing serious I—"

"Oh, no. She's going to play golf with you in the morning. You can spare her for just one night, can't you, Dexter?"

Her smile was kind. She and Dexter liked each other. In the living room he talked for a moment before he said goodnight.

Returning to the College Club, where he had rooms, he stood in the doorway for a moment and watched the dancers. He leaned against the door post, nodded at a man or two—yawned.

"Hello, kiddo."

THE familiar voice at his elbow startled him. Judy Jones had left a man and crossed the room to him—Judy Jones, a slender enamelled doll in cloth of gold, gold in a band at her head, gold in two slipper points at her dress's hem. The fragile glow of her face seemed to blossom as she smiled at him. A breeze of warmth and light blew through the room. His hands in the pockets of his dinner jacket tightened spasmodically. He was filled with a sudden excitement.

"When did you get back?" he asked casually.

"Come here and I'll tell you about it."

She turned and he followed her. She had been away—he could have wept at the wonder of her return. She had passed through enchanted streets, doing young things that were like plaintive music. All mysterious happenings, all fresh and quickening hopes, had gone away with her, come back with her now.

She turned in the doorway.

"Have you a car here? If you haven't I have."

"I have a coupé."

In then, with a rustle of golden cloth. He slammed the door. Into so many cars she had stepped—like this—like that—her back against the leather, so—her elbow resting on the door—waiting. She would have been soiled long since had there been anything to soil her,—except herself—but these things were all her own outpouring.

With an effort he forced himself to start the car and avoiding her surprised glance backed into the street. This was nothing, he must remember. She had done this before and he had put her behind him, as he would have slashed a bad account from his books.

He drove slowly downtown and affecting a disinterested abstraction traversed the deserted streets of the business section, peopled here and there, where a movie was giving out its crowd or where consumptive or pugilistic youth lounged in front of pool halls. The clink of glasses and the slap of hands on the bars issued from saloons, cloisters of glazed glass and dirty yellow light.

She was watching him closely and the silence was embarrassing yet in this crisis he could find no casual word with which to profane the hour. At a convenient turning he began to zig-zag back toward the College Club.

"Have you missed me?" she asked suddenly.

"Everybody missed you."

He wondered if she knew of Irene Scheerer. She had been back only a day—her absence had been almost contemporaneous with his engagement.

"What a remark!" Judy laughed sadly—without sadness. She looked at him searchingly. He became absorbed for a moment in the dashboard.

"You're handsomer than you used to be," she said thoughtfully, "Dexter, you have the most memorable eyes."

He could have laughed at this, but he did not laugh. It was the sort of thing that was said to sophomores. Yet it stabbed at him.

"I'm awfully tired of everything, kiddo." She called everyone kiddo, endowing the obsolete slang with careless, individual comradie. "I wish you'd marry me."

The directness of this confused him. He should have told her now that he was going to marry another girl but he could not tell her. He could as easily have sworn that he had never loved her.

"I think we'd get along," she continued, on the same note, "unless probably you've forgotten me and fallen in love with another girl."

Her confidence was obviously enormous. She had said, in effect, that she found such a thing impossible to believe, that if it were true he had merely committed a childish indiscretion—and probably to show off. She would forgive him, because it was not a matter of any moment but rather something to be brushed aside lightly.

"Of course you could never love anybody but me," she continued, "I like the way you love me. Oh, Dexter, have you forgotten last year?"

"No, I haven't forgotten."

"Neither have I!"

Was she sincerely moved—or was she carried along by the wave of her own acting?

"I wish we could be like that again," she said, and he forced himself to answer:

JUST THE BOOK FOR XMAS

Every radio fan wants the Standard Radio Encyclopedia. It gives the knowledge absolutely necessary to have a good set. Defines radio terms clearly. Explains the work of every instrument.

Makes it possible to easily understand the most technical radio books and magazines. As necessary to either amateur or expert as a good dictionary is to a writer. Absolutely authoritative and accurate. By A. Howland Wood, ex-Navy Instructor and Radio Engineer. Nearly 100 fine illustrations.

Costs but $2.00, postpaid. Examine it carefully and if you are not absolutely sure it is just the radio book your friend has always wanted, return it and your money will gladly be returned. Order today.

EASY ORDER BLANK

PERRY & ELLIOTT CO.,
146-E Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

Enclosed is $2.00. Send me The Standard Radio Encyclopedia. If I'm not absolutely satisfied, I can return it and get my money back.

Name

Address

You Can Make at Home

Parchment Shades and Lamps
Easy Interesting Profitable

Parchment Shades, Lamps, and Shields in artistic designs are the newest vogue. Save 1/2 usual price by getting our Shades and Lamps flat, designed ready for coloring. Full directions for making; so simple anyone can do it. Free Catalog shows 300 interesting shapes, sizes and designs. If you are interested in studying color harmony, unusual methods of treatment, effective combinations, send 15c for "Instructions Parchment Shade Painting and Making"—includes complete directions for painting and setting up shades. Free with every painting outfit.

CHINA PAINTERS
The latest of everything in china—saving from 10 to 40 per cent. We are America's largest white china importers and sell direct to users. Send for Free Catalog No. 53 B.

THAYER & CHANDLER, 913 West Van Buren St., CHICAGO

MAKE MONEY AT HOME

YOU can earn from $1 to $2 an hour in your spare time writing show cards. Quickly and easily learned by our new simple "Instructograph" method. No canvassing or soliciting; we teach you how, guarantee you steady work at home no matter where you live, and pay you cash each week.

Full particulars and Booklet Free.

AMERICAN SHOW CARD SCHOOL

117 Ryrie Building

Toronto, Can

BUNIONS
PEDODYNE "Solvent." New way. Pain immediately vanishes. Acts like magic on worst Bunions. Hump gradually disappears.

SENT ON TRIAL

To introduce we will gladly arrange to send you a Box of "Solvent" to try for your own Bunions. Thousands are sending. Simply write and say, "I want to try PEDODYNE."

KAY LABORATORIES, Dept. A271
186 North La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

THE A.E. LITTLE SHOE

has a message for you.

See page 101

TINT GRAY HAIR

JUST brush or comb a little "Brownatone" into your gray, faded, streaked or bleached hair and take 10 years off your age. Thousands of prominent women in the United States and Canada have proclaimed "Brownatone" their best friend. Don't experiment. Acts instantly, easily applied at home and guaranteed harmless to hair, scalp or skin. Any shade from golden brown to black—50c and $1.50 at drug and toilet counters everywhere. Trial bottle sent direct for 10c.

The Kenton Pharmacal Co.
736 Coppin Bldg., Covington, Ky.
Canada Address, Windsor, Ont.

BROWNATONE

Use NaTone Lemonated Shampoo to improve the natural gloss and fluffiness of your hair. At druggists or direct, Large Bottle 50c.

Alta Art Studios
a new book of exquisite art photographs
Art Nude Studies
in book form, handsomely and conveniently bound. This is not a random collection but a very choice selection of Action, Statuesque and Still poses, from life, some in studio and others in natural outdoor atmospheres.
This Edition will be supplied in a choice of two bindings:
Lodestone Art
Paper $1.00
Leather, Quality
Deluxe 3.00
Alta Studios, Inc.
111 Golden Gate Ave.
San Francisco, Cal.

Alta Art Studios

$ MAKE MONEY $
AT HOME

Make 1 to 2 Dollars an hour At Home In Your Spare Time. We guarantee to make you a Show Card Writer by our "New Simple Method." No Canvassing or Soliciting. Working Outfit Free. We sell your work and pay you cash each week no matter where you live.

Illustrated booklet and terms free.

THE DETROIT SHOW CARD SCHOOL

Canadian Office 12 Land Security Building Toronto, Ontario	U. S. Office 212 Dinan Building Detroit, Michigan
--	---

"I don't think we can."
"I suppose not. . . . I hear you're giving Irene Scheerer a violent rush."
There was not the faintest emphasis on the name, yet Dexter was suddenly ashamed.

"Oh, take me home," cried Judy suddenly, "I don't want to go back to that idiotic dance—with those children."

Then, as he turned up the street that led to the residence district, Judy began to cry quietly to herself. He had never seen her cry before.

The dark street lightened, the dwellings of the rich loomed up around them, he stopped his coupé in front of the great white bulk of the Mortimer Jones' house, somnolent, gorgeous, drenched with the splendor of the damp moonlight. Its solidity startled him. The strong walls, the fine steel of the girders, the breadth and beam and pomp of it were there only to bring out the contrast with the young beauty beside him. It was sturdy to accentuate her slightness—as if to show what a breeze could be generated by a butterfly's wing.

He sat perfectly quiet, his nerves in wild clamor, afraid that if he moved he would find her irresistibly in his arms. Two tears had rolled down her wet face and trembled on her upper lip.

"I'm more beautiful than anybody else," she said brokenly, "why can't I be happy?" Her moist eyes tore at his stability—mouth turned slowly downward with an exquisite sadness, "I'd like to marry you if you'll have me, Dexter. I suppose you think I'm not worth having but I'll be so beautiful for you, Dexter."

A million phrases of anger, of pride, of passion, of hatred, of tenderness fought on his lips. Then a perfect wave of emotion washed over him, carrying off with it a sediment of wisdom, of convention, of doubt, of honor. This was his girl who was speaking, his own, his beautiful, his pride.

"Won't you come in?" he heard her draw in her breath sharply.

Waiting.

"All right," his voice was trembling, "I'll come in."

IT seems strange to say that neither when it was over nor a long time afterward did he regret that night. Looking at it from the perspective of ten years, the fact that Judy's flare for him endured just one month seemed of little importance. Nor did it matter that by his yielding he subjected himself to a deeper agony in the end and gave serious hurt to Irene Scheerer and to Irene's parents who had befriended him. There was nothing sufficiently pictorial about Irene's grief to stamp itself on his mind.

Dexter was at bottom hard-minded. The attitude of the city on his action was of no importance to him, not because he was going to leave the city, but because any outside attitude on the situation seemed superficial. He was completely indifferent to popular opinion. Nor, when he had seen that it was no use, that he did not possess in himself the power to move fundamentally or to hold Judy Jones, did he bear any malice toward her. He loved her and he would love her until the day he was too old for loving—but he could not have her. So he tasted the deep pain that is reserved only for the strong, just as he had tasted for a little while the deep happiness.

Even the ultimate falsity of the grounds upon which Judy terminated the engagement—that she did not want to "take him away" from Irene, that it was on her conscience—did not revolt him. He was beyond any revulsion or any amusement.

He went east in February with the intention of selling out his laundries and settling in New York—but the war came to America in March and changed his plans. He returned to the west, handed over the management of the business to his partner and went into the first officers' training camp in late April. He was one of those young thousands who greeted the war with a certain amount of relief, welcoming the liberation from webs of tangled emotion.

THIS story is not his biography, remember, although things creep into it which have nothing to do with those dreams he had when he was young. We are almost done with them and with him now. There is only one more incident to be related here and it happens seven years farther on.

It took place in New York, where he had done well—so well that there were no barriers too high for him now. He was thirty-two years old, and, except for one flying trip immediately after the war, he had not been west in seven years. A man named Devlin from Detroit came into his office to see him in a business way, and then and there this incident occurred, and closed out, so to speak, this particular side of his life.

"So you're from the middle west," said the man Devlin with careless curiosity. "That's funny—I thought men like you were probably born and raised on Wall Street. You know—wife of one of my best friends in Detroit came from your city. I was an usher at the wedding."

Dexter waited with no apprehension of what was coming. There was a magic that his city would never lose for him. Just as Judy's house had always seemed to him more mysterious and gay than other houses, so his dream of the city itself, now that he had gone from it, was pervaded with a melancholy beauty.

"Judy Simms," said Devlin with no particular interest, "Judy Jones she was once."

"Yes, I knew her." A dull impatience spread over him. He had heard, of course, that she was married,—perhaps deliberately he had heard no more.

"Awfully nice girl," brooded Devlin, meaninglessly, "I'm sort of sorry for her."

"Why?" Something in Dexter was alert, receptive, at once.

"Oh, Joe Simms has gone to pieces in a way. I don't mean he beats her, you understand, or anything like that. But he drinks and runs around—"

"Doesn't she run around?"

"No. Stays at home with her kids."

"Oh."

"She's a little too old for him," said Devlin.

"Too old!" cried Dexter, "why man, she's only twenty-seven."

He was possessed with a wild notion of rushing out into the streets and taking a train to Detroit. He rose to his feet, spasmodically, involuntarily.

"I guess you're busy," Devlin apologized quickly. "I didn't realize—"

"No, I'm not busy," said Dexter, steadying his voice, "I'm not busy at all. Not busy at all. Did you say she was—twenty-seven. No, I said she was twenty-seven."

"Yes, you did," agreed Devlin drily.

"Go on, then. Go on."

"What do you mean?"

"About Judy Jones."

Devlin looked at him helplessly.

"Well, that's—I told you all there is to it. He treats her like the devil. Oh, they're not going to get divorced or anything. When he's particularly outrageous she forgives him. In fact, I'm inclined to think she loves him. She was a pretty girl when she first came to Detroit."

A pretty girl! The phrase struck Dexter as ludicrous.

"Isn't she—a pretty girl any more?"

"Oh, she's all right."

"Look here," said Dexter, sitting down suddenly, "I don't understand. You say she was a 'pretty girl' and now you say she's 'all right.' I don't understand what you mean—Judy Jones wasn't a pretty girl, at all. She was a great beauty. Why, I knew her, I knew her. She was—"

Devlin laughed pleasantly.

"I'm not trying to start a row," he said. "I think Judy's a nice girl and I like her. I can't understand how a man like Joe Simms could fall madly in love with her, but he did." Then he added, "Most of the women like her."

Dexter looked closely at Devlin, thinking wildly that there must be a reason for this, some insensitivity in the man or some private malice.

"Lots of women fade just-like-that," Devlin snapped his fingers. "You must have seen it happen. Perhaps I've forgotten how pretty she was at her wedding. I've seen her so much since then, you see. She has nice eyes."

A sort of dullness settled down upon Dexter. For the first time in his life he felt like getting very drunk. He knew that he was laughing loudly at something Devlin had said but he did not know what it was or why it was funny. When Devlin went, in a few minutes, he lay down on his lounge and looked out the window at the New York skyline into which the sun was sinking in dull lovely shades of pink and gold.

He had thought that having nothing else to lose he was invulnerable at last—but he knew that he had just lost something more, as surely as if he had married Judy Jones and seen her fade away before his eyes.

The dream was gone. Something had been taken from him. In a sort of panic he pushed the palms of his hands into his eyes and tried to bring up a picture of the waters lapping at Lake Erminie and the moonlit verandah, and gingham on the golf links and the dry sun and the gold color of her neck's soft down. And her mouth damp to his kisses and her eyes plaintive with melancholy and her freshness like new fine linen in the morning. Why these things were no longer in the world. They had existed and they existed no more.

FOR the first time in years the tears were streaming down his face. But they were for himself now. He did not care about mouth and eyes and moving hands. He wanted to care and he could not care. For he had gone away and he could never go back any more. The gates were closed, the sun was gone down and there was no beauty but the grey beauty of steel that withstands all time. Even the grief he could have borne was left behind in the country of illusion, of youth, of the richness of life, where his winter dreams had flourished.

"Long ago," he said, "long ago, there was something in me, but now that thing is gone. Now that thing is gone, that thing is gone. I cannot cry. I cannot care. That thing will come back no more."

Flaming Youth

(Continued from page 25)

"I want it to be so. I love to have you pet me."

"And I haven't even the strength to resist that," he muttered.

"Then you're going to run over when I visit Cissie?" she asked lightly.

"Of course."

WITH unwearied strategy Pat made opportunities for being with Scott thereafter. Each time they were together alone she came to his arms as sweetly and naturally as if she claimed him of right; each time until, the evening before the wedding when, as he drew her to him, she twitched away with a boyish, petulant jerk of the shoulders.

"What is it, Pat?" he queried.

"Nothing. I don't want you to pet me. That's all."

He had the acumen to suspect that this might be a first crisis in their newly established relations, though he did not fathom her purpose. "Very well," he assented quietly. "I shall never set finger upon you except as you wish it."

"Well, I don't wish it. Not now."

A dart of lightning flashed through her clouded look, "I might tomorrow."

His brows lifted inquiringly. Mockingly, too. Pat wondered. You never could tell with Mr. Scott. What would he say? He said nothing.

"D'you know what I mean?" demanded Pat, who didn't clearly know herself.

"Perfectly."

"What?"

"Coquetry. That's a form of dishonesty—between us. And between us there is no reason nor place for anything but honesty."

She came to him then, encircled him closely, drew her lips from his, after a time, to murmur: "You understand me so. When you say things like that I'm crazy about you."

Against his better judgment he said: "I wonder how much you really care for me, Pat?"

"Oh, an awful lot! Or I wouldn't be acting like this. But," she added, with pensive frankness, "I've been just as crazy about other people before."

"I see. It's the normal thing for you to feel this way toward someone."

"Oh, well; you expect to have somebody in love with you," she explained. "Think how lost you'd feel without it. And it's natural to play back, isn't it? Now I've hurt you." She spoke the words with a kind of remorseful interest as an experimentalist might feel pity for the animal under his knife.

"That doesn't matter. One gets used to being hurt."

All woman, at this she tightened her

Restore YOUR Pep and Power!

STRONGFORT
The Perfect Man

Resist the forces that are sapping your vital powers. Banish the weaknesses that make your life a wretched failure. Stop experimenting with dope and drugs and foolish fads. Shake off Catarrh, Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Bad Blood, Rupture, Nervousness, Youthful Errors, Vital Depletion, Impotency and other results of neglect and abuse (see Consultation Coupon).

Don't Be a Chronic Weakling

You know that life isn't worth living without the ability—power, virility of vital, healthy manhood. You know that you can never be a 100% Man again until you regain the vital force that you have lost thru overwork, worry, excesses and defects that rob you of the joys of Nature's immutable laws. Dope and Drugs, Pills and Powders can never help you. Such methods are the refuge of a weakling who hides the sad and to acknowledge his errors and get a new start in life. There is only one way that you can escape the misery of mental and physical weakness and that is: through strict adherence to Mother Nature's Laws. She will not fail you if you sincerely want to regain your falling vitality and be a red-blooded man with pep and power to measure up to real manhood.

Build Up Your Body and Brain

Banish Your Ailments. You can be healthy, Virile and Successful—you can free yourself of the weaknesses that rob you of the joys of Life; and that sooner or later will cause you to lose your self-respect, your friends and your position. You can build yourself up—develop your muscles—clear your befuddled brain—strengthen and correct every organ and function and get a new start in life. You will Come to Me in Full Confidence. Don't be afraid to tell me your full story. The more confidence you place in me, the more quickly I can help you. Come to me as you would to a brother and let me help you correct past errors and achieve your fondest hopes and ambitions. Remember, everything you tell me will be held in the strictest confidence.

STRONGFORTISM

The Modern Science of Health Promotion

Do not confuse this Science of Nature with ordinary so-called physical culture or gymnastic courses. Strongfortism contains all that is embodied in preliminary methods and, in addition, brings you the scientific applications that will rid you of all ailments as Nervousness, Rupture, Constipation, Bad Blood, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Bad Habits and the numerous other results of breaking Nature's Laws. You will be revived, restored, rejuvenated—made over into a new being; and you will experience an inflow of vital force that will surprise and please you—renew your flagging powers and Manhood and place you on the Straight Road to Health, Happiness and a Successful Life. I guarantee it irrespective of your age, occupation or surroundings—no matter how often you have tried and been disappointed. You cannot fail with Strongfortism.

Send For My Free Book

The deepest hidden Laws of Nature are explained in my wonderfully instructive book, "Promotion and Conservation of Health, Strength and Mental Energy." It will tell you priceless truths about your body and will show you how you can make yourself over into a vigorous specimen of Virile Manhood. Just check the subjects on the Free Consultation Coupon on which you want special confidential information and send with 10c. to help pay postage, etc. I'll do the rest. Send for my free book Right Now—TODAY.

LIONEL STRONGFORT

Dept. 1089 Physical and Health Specialist Newark, N. J.

FREE CONSULTATION COUPON

MR. LIONEL STRONGFORT, Dept. 1089, Newark, N. J.—Please send me your book, "Promotion and Conservation of Health, Strength and Mental Energy," for postage on which I enclose a 10-cent piece (one dime). I have marked (X) before the subject in which I am interested.

- | | | |
|--------------|----------------|------------------|
| ..Cold | ..Increased | ..Impotency |
| ..Catarrh | ..Height | ..Falling Hair |
| ..Asthma | ..Pimples | ..Weak Eyes |
| ..Hay Fever | ..Blackheads | ..Gastritis |
| ..Obesity | ..Short Wind | ..Heart |
| ..Headache | ..Flat Feet | ..Weakness |
| ..Thinness | ..Stomach | ..Poor |
| ..Rupture | ..Disorders | ..Circulation |
| ..Lumbago | ..Constipation | ..Skin Disorders |
| ..Neuritis | ..Biliousness | ..Despondency |
| ..Neuralgia | ..Torpid Liver | ..Weaknesses |
| ..Flat Chest | ..Indigestion | ..Neurasthenia |
| ..Deformity | ..Nervousness | ..Round |
| (Describe) | ..Poor Memory | ..Shoulders |
| ..Insomnia | ..Rheumatism | ..Lung Troubles |
| ..Manhood | ..Diabetes | ..Stoop |
| ..Restored | ..Prostate | ..Shoulders |
| ..Female | ..Troubles | ..Muscular |
| ..Disorders | ..Youthful | ..Development |
| ..Successful | ..Errors | ..Great Strength |
| ..Marriage | ..Vital Losses | |

Name.....

Age..... Occupation.....

Street.....

City..... State.....